

Education, training and on-going support

At Risk Evolves, we believe that knowledge and understanding are fundamental to the successful implementation of any system: knowing what to do and how to do it correctly is important; but knowing why it's done provides a more robust platform to build on.

We tend to think of risk as something external and uncontrollable: the spread of a computer virus, the sudden failure of a machine, a shipment delay due to bad weather, an unexpected absence due to accident... While we can't control the weather, we can make sure that critical nodes in processes have been identified and protected and that both pre-emptive and re-active action plans are established.

Key to all organisational risk management are the personnel involved. Ignorant and thoughtless staff who feel undervalued and overlooked raise the level of risk. But when people understand their role and importance in the grand scheme of things, when they take ownership and recognise their personal responsibilities and capabilities – in short, when they are informed and involved – risk is greatly reduced.

Our philosophy is to undertake knowledge transfer as part of our day-to-day service to ensure that you can continue independently without us once the project is complete. Even so, unlike many consultancy companies, we won't walk away and leave you at the end of the project: we'll be around to provide help and guidance when and where it's needed.

In addition to the support we provide as an integral part of all our projects, we also deliver bespoke workshops and specialist training, including half-day courses in the following areas:

Risk management

Effective governance

Cyber security

Supply chain assurance

Identifying the right finance

On-going finance management

We only work with experienced tutors, who are experts in their subjects, having worked in industry for many years. We deliver the theory supported by practical, interactive sessions and illustrate using real examples. This is not "death by Powerpoint".

People are one of the key assets of your organisation. Investment in their training is a key element of a sound risk-prevention strategy.
